Social Cause Campaign

Name : Angel Londhe

Portfolio Piece 05 : Instagram, Reel Script, Donation Page and Poster

Campaign concept and copy

Pehla Panna (The First Page)

The NGO	A small trust that sets up one room libraries in neighbourhoods where children have no easy access to books. Each library is run by local volunteers.
Goal	A book donation drive across the city, plus monthly donors and Saturday reading volunteers.
Who we're talking to	People in their 20s and 30s who grew up loving books and now have shelves full of ones they've already read.
What to avoid	Pity. No sad close-ups, no guilt. The children are readers who haven't been given the chance, not charity cases.

The idea

Pass on the book that found you.

Everyone has one book that turned up at exactly the right time. We ask people to donate that book, with a note inside about why it mattered, so a child gets both the story and a stranger who cared about it.

Instagram carousel (8 slides, launch post)

01

What was the first book you couldn't put down?

Plain type on warm brown. Nothing else.

02

Maybe it was a Tinkle read under the blanket with a torch. Maybe a library book you never returned. (We won't tell.)

Photo: a torch on a blanket, one comic peeping out.

03

For a lot of kids in our reading circles, that first book hasn't happened yet.

04

Not because they don't want to read.

Because the nearest library is two buses away, and a new book costs more than lunch.

05

So we build libraries where they live. One shelf, one room, one neighbourhood at a time.

Photo: a real Pehla Panna room, kids laughing.

06

Here's where you come in. Pass on the book that found you.

07

Write a note inside about why it mattered to you. Then drop it at one of our six collection points in the city.

Map pins. Addresses in the caption.

08

Somewhere in this city, a kid is about to meet their first page.

Logo and #TheBookThatFoundMe

Caption: Tell us yours in the comments. Ours was a Malgudi Days with the cover held on by tape. Collection points are listed below, open every weekend till 30 November. #TheBookThatFoundMe

Reel script (45 seconds, vertical)

TIME	WHAT WE SEE	WHAT WE HEAR AND READ
0 to 5s	A close shot of an old book's inside cover. A name written in a child's handwriting, crossed out and written again.	Voice over: "Mine was Malgudi Days. The cover was held on with tape."
5 to 13s	Quick cuts. Different adults on their balconies, at work, in a café, each holding up their childhood book to the camera.	"Mine was Matilda." "Mine was a Tinkle Digest. Number 4." "Mine was my brother's chemistry textbook. Don't ask."
13 to 20s	A girl, about nine, in a small room. She runs a finger along a shelf with four books on it.	On screen: Riya hasn't found hers yet.
20 to 30s	Volunteers unpacking boxes of donated books. The same shelf, now full. Riya pulls one out and a folded note falls into her lap.	Voice over: "So we asked people to pass on the book that found them. With a note inside."
30 to 38s	Over her shoulder, we read the note. Then her face. She doesn't smile big, just a little.	The note, in handwriting: "This one got me through Class 6. Hope it gets you through something too. Love, Aditi"
38 to 45s	End card. Warm brown, logo, link to collection points.	Voice over: "Pass on the book that found you." On screen: Pehla Panna. Collection points in bio.

Donation page

Give a book. Or give the shelf it sits on.

Books are the heart of this. But shelves, a tube light and a librarian's monthly stipend are what keep the door open. If you'd rather give money than a book, here's exactly where it goes:

₹500	Five new books, picked by the kids themselves.
₹1,500	One steel bookshelf, strong enough for rainy seasons and very excited little readers.
₹5,000	A month's stipend for a community librarian, usually a young woman from the same neighbourhood.

Button: Donate
Below the button: You'll get a receipt by email within a day. Every rupee is listed in our annual report, which we publish on this page.

Thank you screen: Thank you. Somewhere in this city, a shelf just got a little heavier.

Volunteer poster (A3, for cafés, offices and college notice boards)

COME READ WITH US

Some stories are meant to be read out loud.

Give us two hours, one Saturday a month.
Sit with a small group of children, open a book,
and enjoy it together.

You don't need any experience.
Just bring your voice and a little patience.
They'll bring the questions.

Scan the code to join as a reading volunteer
Pehla Panna

The headline starts with a feeling most of us remember, being read to as a child, instead of talking about what the NGO needs. People say yes faster when they can picture the moment they'll be part of.

> Why it starts with the donor's childhood. Most NGO campaigns open with a sad number and a sad photo, and people have learned to scroll past them. From my own time volunteering with children, I've seen that kids don't want to be pitied. They light up the moment someone treats them as readers. So this campaign starts with the donor's own childhood, something warm and personal, and simply asks them to pass it on. The handwritten note is the part I'm proudest of. It turns a used book into a chosen one, and gives the reel a gentle ending that stays with you.